Vallejo Community Produce Program

"I have 2 kids: my first one is almost four and the other is a year and half.

Prices are high in the stores and if I get something from here then I can have a little more in my pocket to spend.

Especially with kids, I can use the money to buy diapers and wipers or something like that.

[At the Food Bank] I get onions, potatoes, watermelon and that helps a lot because I can give something to my kids. Sometimes when you go to the store have to make choices and can't get what you like.

My little one especially likes when I make fried potatoes with ketchup. And I use watermelon to make juice or give them some popsicles. You can make a lot of things."

What would say to the people who are thinking about donating to the Food Bank?

"Continue donating because it helps me a lot and my kids, and other kids so they can have more food on the table especially with the high prices in the store. I know it helps more people too, because I tell people I know when I find places like this that are helping."
